College mounts awareness campaign

ELEANOR PANICHAS, director of publications, takes a moment from her busy day to talk about the new "awareness campaign" RIC is mounting in the media. (What's News Photo by Peter P. Tobia)

Rhode Island College has kicked off a major new advertising campaign. The theme is "Rhode Island College for all the right reasons." The coordinated effort was begun on Jan. 23 when the first of a series of large ads was published in the state's major daily newspaper.

However, the print media placement was only the beginning of what the college's director of publications, Eleanor B. Panichas, terms a "good, strong" program to enhance awareness of RIC in Rhode Island and nearby Massachusetts.

Part of a five year plan developed by the Division of Advancement and Support, the campaign is geared to recruitment and, as such, was put together in conjunction with the college's admissions office. It aims at raising consciousness of RIC's image among potential students and their families, and it utilizes television, radio, and billboards, as well as the print media to accomplish its goal.

There will be ad placements in several of the state's newspapers in addition to the series running in the major daily. However, the segment of the campaign which is generating the most excitement among those on campus who have seen it is the group of television spots videotaped at the conclusion of last semester.

The TV ads as well as the print media display ads, the billboards and the radio spots all concentrate on four points of focus which elaborate on the campaign's main theme.

The four points are value, flexibility, lifestyle and faculty & alumni. Four TV spots, one on each of the four points, have been prepared. They are 30 seconds long and will run a total of roughly 120 times.

Two different radio spots have been produced on each of the points, a 30 second version and a 60 second version. The total number of placements for the radio ads is now being determined. Twenty-one billboards have been reserved and the messages will be rotated among them so that the effect will be to have 42 placements. Some are in nearby Massachusetts. The college recently

Dear Dr. Marciniak:

'You really deserved to come here'

by George LaTour

"I loved the girl who played the violin. It must have taken a great deal of time and courage to stand up there and play for us."

"Sometimes the kettle drums sounded like thunder. That was excellent. I wish you could have played that part again."

"I think it's good that the girl plays (the violin) so good."

"Thank you for spending time with us and I think you are going to be a good group when you get a little bit bigger."

Such were some of the responses from sixth graders at the Barrington Middle School after a concert by 30 Rhode Island College student musicians, under the direction of Dr. Francis Marciniak, music professor and conductor of the American Band. Some 43 of them sent hand-written letters to him at the college.

Marciniak and the RIC musicians played before three assemblies at the school on Dec. 8. Playing with them was Sheila Falls, a ninth grader from Bayview Academy, whose violin performance seemed generally to have knocked out the youngsters, if their letters are any indication.

Marciniak pointed out that Sheila has been studying the violin with Barbara A. Poularikas, an associate professor of music at RIC.

"At the end, I liked the girl who played the violin. She played very well for a ninth year old. She must of practice for many years to be that well at her age."

"I especially admired the violinist. I hope she didn't think we didn't like her playing just because we clapped too early. She was terrific. She deserved a grand applause."

"I admire the violinist with the grate ability to play. I have played violin for at least 3 years, but I switched to a recorder."

"The ninth grade violinist played very well. I've heard some adult players who have been playing all their lives and she played as well or better."

While the young violinist captured the imagination of the equally-young audience, high praise rang out from most letters for other performers in the ensemble.

Play like you guys

"My favorite instrument is the piano. I have my own. I just started taking lessons. I hope I could play like you guys."

"Everyone in the ensemble played like they have been playing for 20 years. The best part I like was the percussion because I like drums."

"I liked the drums too. They were supper great too."

"The one thing I liked best was the timpani (kettle drums), because he was fast playing them."

"The violinist was good, but the best was the drum and brass combination."

"All the singers and instrument players were wonderful. I enjoyed the end piece the most. The singers had beautiful voices."

Seniors line up for job workshops, interviews

"Never before have we had such a response," reports Frankie Wellins, director of Rhode Island College's Career Services, in regard to the current turnout of seniors signing up for job interviews.

"It's nice to see they're not discouraged by the job market," she said.

The response, which she described as "overwhelming this year" was not only for actual job interviews but for job-related workshops that teach students how to prepare resumes and take interviews.

Some 150 students signed up for forthcoming interviews by various firms within "a couple of hours." This compares with approximately the same number of students signing up previously but over a "much longer period of time."

Some 209 students came to the workshops in a recent three-week period over the semester break compared to 284 all last year.

Wellins pointed out that last year was the first year for the workshop program.

"I'm glad to see our students are not giving up. They're working hard and starting earlier," she observed.

Wellins reported that by noon the first day the recruiting schedules were out "many were full and had waiting lists."

Some 25 firms are tentatively scheduled to send representatives to the RIC campus this spring to conduct interviews.

RIC student teachers to be certified as substitutes

John M. Crenson

Rhode Island College seniors who have completed their student teaching assignments will be allowed to teach as regular certified substitute teachers at regular rates of pay, according to a recent decision by Arthur R. Pontarelli, state commissioner of elementary and secondary education.

Operating on a pilot basis, some 30 elementary education students will be issued emergency substitute certificates in the area in which they are being trained. These will be valid for 75 days of teaching in the public schools.

The program is scheduled to begin this week, according to Dr. John M. Crenson, professor of elementary education and former director of cooperative education.

"This is a new program. I really don't

Notes from Bernadette

by Bernadette V. Small

We join with President Sweet and the entire college community in extending our best wishes and congratulations to Dr. Sidney P. Rollins, professor of education, as he takes up his new duties as acting assistant commissioner of higher education—the position held by Dr. Carl Trendler who is leaving to become executive coordinator of Washington State Council for Postsecondary Education.

We are happy to inform you that Sam D'Ambra of the department of landscaping and grounds is now at home recuperating from ankle surgery he underwent on Jan. 19 at Fatima Hospital. Sam will be away from his job on campus for approximately eight weeks. He would appreciate hearing from you during that time. He is at home at 189 Laurel Hill Avenue, Providence, 02909.

We are sorry to learn that Mrs. Catherine Radice, assistant professor of the Henry Barnard School, is seriously ill at her home. Our best wishes and prayers go out to her during this difficult time. Please send cards and messages to her at 166 Julian Street, Providence, 02909.

We were saddened to learn of the death of Raymond J. Rouleau on New Year's Eve. Mr. Rouleau was the father-in-law of Estelle Rouleau from the department of modern languages. We extend our belated, sincerest condolences to Estelle, her husband Maurice, and family.

Belated congratulations to two RIC grandmothers!!—Nita Natale of the Records Office and her husband, Tom, are grandparents. Their son, Dr. Thomas Natale and his wife, Ann Marie, are the parents of a baby son, Matthew Thomas Natale, born on Sept. 27, and weighing 6 lbs., 1 oz.

Also, Cecelia Iannazzi and her husband, Pat, are grandparents. Their son, Donald, and his wife, Ann Marie, are the parents of a baby daughter, Andrea, born on Oct. 22 at Womens and Infants Hospital in Providence, weighing 6 lbs., 14 oz. Their daughter, Jo-Ann Calcagni, and her husband are the parents of a son, Michael Ralph Calcagni, born Dec. 17 at Womens and Infants Hospital in Providence. Cecelia is also employed in the Records Office.

Dr. Gamal Zaki, director of gerontology suffered a minor automobile accident on Jan. 18, and is wearing a cervical collar because of a whiplash. We wish him a speedy recovery from his discomfort.

We are pleased to learn that Joyce Turner, secretary to the dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, is now at home and recuperating from recent hospitalization. We extend our best wishes to Joyce for a continued recuperation.

We were saddened to learn of the death of Raymond Brown of Johnston. He was the father of Mrs. Gladys DiMeglio, cook's helper in Donovan Dining Center. Mr. Brown died on Jan. 19. We extend our sincerest condolences to Gladys and her family.

Legislators, B.O.G. to meet at RIC

The second annual meeting between the state General Assembly and the state Board of Governors for Higher Education will be held this year at the Rhode Island College Faculty Center on Feb. 1.

Beginning with a reception and dinner at 4:30 p.m., the business session will commence at 6:30 with a presentation by Albert E. Carlotti, board chairman, on budget highlights, followed by a presentation on state economic development in higher education by Terrence Murray, chairman of the Strategic Development Commission.

Dr. Eleanor M. McMahon, state commissioner of higher education, will then chair a reaction panel of key legislative and educational leaders.

CTU to bring specialists to RIC

The committee on technology utilization and its subcommittees will host visits by two specialists in communications technology at the college in February. The pair of experts have been invited to provide information and opinions concerning specific communications issues now being discussed by the committee.

On Friday, Feb. 4, Nelson Weideman, director of academic computing at the University of Rhode Island, will meet with the CTU subcommittee on computer support to discuss future directions in academic computing and to discuss ways in which colleges are managing their computer systems. This meeting, open to all members of the college community, will be held in the Kelley Board Room, Roberts Hall, from 1 to 3 p.m.

On Friday, Feb. 11, at 1 p.m., Robert Baynes, supervisor of computer operations at the Raytheon Co. will give an illustrated lecture on the fundamentals of computer networking. He will make his presentation in the Fogarty Life Science Building, room 050.

A variety of information networks are opening up on college campuses throughout the United States and Canada. Most of these networks allow computers at different locations to "talk" to each other. In this way, electronic mail services, informational transferral, exchange of software between computers and the like can be established. Some networks also provide for local exchange of audio and video signals. Baynes, whose lecture is open to the public, will describe all categories of network systems and discuss the comparative advantages of each.

Initiation tomorrow

Rhode Island College's Society of Pershing Rifles will hold an initiation ceremony on Tuesday, Feb. 1, at noon in Horace Mann 193.

For more information contact William O'Brien or Steven Ruscito in Horace Mann 193 or call 456-8177.

Grant deadlines announced

The Bureau of Grants and Sponsored Projects has announced the following application deadlines:

The National Endowment for the Humanities has established March 14 as the deadline for receipt of Program Development proposals. This program will support new programmatic initiative falling outside other guidelines of the Endowment. Proposals related to the recently announced initiative on the Bicentennial of the American Constitution are especially encouraged.

The Sinfonia Foundation has announced a March 1 deadline for grants to qualified individuals conducting scholarly research in areas relating to American Music or music in America. The average grant is $1,000.

The National Science Foundation is accepting applications until Feb. 15 for the visiting professorships for women in science and engineering. This program encourages women to develop careers in research in science and engineering and to provide greater visibility for women scientists and engineers in industry, government and academic research centers. Women who hold doctorates in science or engineering fields and who have research experience in academic, industry, or public sectors are eligible. Approximately $1 million is available to fund 15 to 20 professorships.

The Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological research has established a March 1 deadline for support of research projects in all branches of anthropology and related disciplines. Projects use cross-cultural, historical, biological, and linguistic approaches to the study of man's origins, development, and variation.

Special consideration is given to projects combining/integrating two or more sub-fields of anthropology. A limited number of $15,000 post-doctoral fellowships and $10,000 senior research grants-in-aid are available, although the bulk of the awards will be under $5,000.

ADAMHA has established March 1 as the deadline for a variety of research grants dealing with alcohol and alcohol abuse, drug and substance abuse, prevention research in these areas including smoking, applied therapeutics, health practices, behavioral sciences, clinical research, crime and delinquency, geriatric mental health, mental health and aging, mental health epidemiology, minority mental health, rape, and work and mental health research. Each of these programs is administered by a separate branch or center. We have names of contact persons for all of these programs.

March 1 is also the deadline for several projects relating to the discipline of nursing. Nursing special project grants, nursing research projects, and nursing practitioner programs are all due on this date.

Although it is not firm at this time, we anticipate a March deadline for proposals supporting research which studies the ways in which legislative, administrative, judicial policies, and government organizations affect education, particularly equity in education. More on this later.

Application materials and additional information on these and other funding possibilities are available at the Bureau of Grants and Sponsored Projects, John C. O'Neill, director. Please call 456-8228 for further information.

Keeping Score

with Kathy Feldmann

Our teams have been busy over the semester break with all of them practicing and keeping to their competitive schedules.

Five weeks are left in the regular season. The men's basketball team is now 8-5 going into the stretch.

They dropped two at the Upsala College Tournament in New Jersey. In the first game RIC was defeated by Upsala 95-68. They lost a heartbreaker in the consolation game to Kings College (PA) 80-76.

More than two weeks went by before the Anchormen played again in the Hamilton College Tournament.

In the first game RIC went up against nationally-ranked Scranton (now ranked ninth in Division III). RIC lost 73-56. RIC was matched against Albright College in the consolation game and was victorious 61-57. Their record stood at 7-4.

The Anchormen split in their last two games. They defeated Western New England 87-75. At this time RIC was ranked seventh among Division III colleges in New England.

In a surprising upset, at least as far as RIC was concerned, a determined Hellenic College beat RIC 51-48.

Leading scorer for the Anchormen is junior co-captain Mike Chapman who is averaging 17.76 points per game. Co-captain Eric Britto and Richard Ethier are in double figures averaging 10.3 and 11.46

PPG respectively.

Larry House, who is averaging 12 rebounds per game, has been in the NCAA rankings every week since the first release Dec. 12. In the most recent NCAA release, House is ranked fifth in the country in rebounding in Division III. RIC is ranked fourth in NCAA with a field goal percentage of 54.3.

The Anchormen will be playing Bryant College tonight, Jan. 31, at home. Both the men and the women will be doing their best to maintain possession of the President's Cup which they won last year.

Last year's game was a thriller which went into overtime and ended with a 52-51 victory for the Anchormen.

This year's match-up should prove to be equally exciting.

The women's basketball team has picked up steam and has boosted their record to 7-5 after a shaky 0-3 beginning.

They took third place in the Kean College (NJ) Christmas Classic. They defeated Eastern Nazarene 65-60 and Westfield State 80-58.

Leading scorer for the Anchorwomen is Jackie Hultquist with 15.75 PPG. Shirley McGunagle is right behind with 15.08 PPG. Janet Smiley and Chris Donilon are averaging over 12 per game. Leading rebounder is Hultquist with an 8.6 average.

Next home game is Monday, Jan. 31, versus Bryant College at 6 p.m.

Theatre dept. sends seven to auditions

Seven students from the college's theatre department along with their partners were in Keene, NH, last Thursday to compete in the regional Irene Ryan Scholarship auditions. The auditions, held under the auspices of the American College Theatre Festival, took place at Keene State College this year, the festival's 15th.

Trying for the scholarship from RIC were Paula Lynch with partner Patti Nolan from last year's production of The Shadow Box, Diane Capotosto from Orpheus Descending, with partner Alan Milligan, and Donna Palumbo from A Touch of the Poet working with Glenn Nadeau.

Also competing in the auditions from the college was Stephen Lynch who appeared in A Touch of the Poet too. His partner was Lynne Ferruolo.

Others auditioning were Michael Mancini who appeared in The Grass Harp, working with Eileen Boarman, Fred Anzevino from Gemini with Mark Moretini as his partner and Richard Purro from Through the Glass Darkly. Purro's partner was Anna DiStefano.

The winner of the regional award in Keene will receive a $750 scholarship and become eligible to audition for one of two national awards given at the ACTF national meeting in Washington, D.C. in the spring. The national level scholarships are worth $2,500 each.

The orderly rush

Business at the college bookstore was in full swing last week as students turned the stiles to buy books for their spring classes. Marion Brown, assistant manager, said 95 percent of the books ordered were on the shelves for the opening of classes. Business, while brisk, was orderly. ABOVE, Audrey Scott, a nursing major, attempts to put her $141 purchase in her car. BELOW, Michele Morra waits, with arms full, to buy some supplies. BELOW-RIGHT, Donna Mosie pushes her way through the turnstile after having her turn at the cash register.

adopted a differential tuition policy for several contiguous Massachusetts communities.

All of the print media ads will contain a reply coupon directed to the admissions office so that the response to the campaign can be evaluated. All of the respondents will be traced from the initial inquiry through the enrollment process.

"The campaign is unusual," Panichas observed. "Most advertising campaigns come out of an agency and there are givens, formulas with which they work. For the most part they are geared to the hard sell. This campaign—as with everything we do here—is focused on graphics. There is a concentration on the graphics."

She went on to explain that the college hired a free-lance copy writer and created a "marriage" between a person with agency experience and a graphic design studio, also engaged from outside the college.

Dr. William Lopes, acting assistant vice-president for college advancement and support, who has been working on the campaign with Mrs. Panichas, said that this approach made it possible to get more visibility for the money involved. By "subcontracting" the job and putting the pieces together the college was able to save money and put the savings into additional placements. The total cost for the semester long effort will be about $100,000.

The timing of the series of ads in the various media has been scheduled to coincide most heavily with the peak recruiting period of February and March. However, the campaign will continue through the first week in June.

The copy which accompanies the visual components of the print and TV ads and the radio copy addresses a subtheme which reinforces the slogan "Rhode Island College for all the right reasons," says Panichas. The subtheme which runs through all of the spots is the quality of a Rhode Island College education coupled with the low cost of attending RIC.

According to Panichas the campaign is scheduled to continue next year using the same main theme with four different sub-themes or focal points.

This year's campaign will include one ad which summarizes the four separate components. Current plans call for making the print media copy for that ad into a poster which can be distributed. In addition to that the office of publications has put the videotape copy for the four TV spots together on one cassette which the admissions office will be able to use in recruiting.

Panichas was especially gratified by the cooperation: her office received from approximately 100 students and a number of faculty members who took part in the taping of TV spots during the busy period at the end of last semester. Some also posed for photos in the print ads.

"The kids cooperated just marvelously. They were just great," said Panichas.

Wellins said if the current job market persists into next year, the college may "have to go to a lottery system" for awarding recruiting appointments to seniors. The director said some other colleges now do just that.

Wellins said they used to let alumni sign up for the job interviews but now they will have to limit the interviews to just graduating seniors.

Some 400 undergraduates will receive diplomas this month from the college and about 800 in May.

Wellins pointed out that the firms coming on campus "really want to see seniors anyway" and, she added, the alumni can come in anytime for interviews.

She said the firms coming on campus usually send just one interviewer who grants up to 13 half-hour interviews to seniors a day. They usually just come for the one day.

Because of the demand now, she said some firms are planning to send two interviewers or visit the campus for two days each.

Wellins urged those students who were late signing up and who, consequently, "can't be fit in" for interviews not to be discouraged.

"Let us know and plan to come in for help. There are still things we can do for you to assist you in your job search," she said.

know of any (other) state that has a similar program (whereby students are getting certified)," he said.

The program springs from a meeting of all the state's school superintendents at which a position paper was issued outlining the difficulty of obtaining the services of substitute teachers who are certified to teach in the state.

The Providence superintendent noted a "shortfall of 30 to 40 substitute teachers per day."

The superintendents have surveyed 38 communities. Of that, 24 are reportedly having problems getting substitute teachers.

The superintendents said that at a time when teachers are being laid off due to declining enrollments, it would appear that there should be an adequate supply of substitute teachers available.

This is not the case, they reported. They explained that union teachers "realize that the teaching profession does not guarantee them job security, therefore, they have been making career changes."

Another financial reality, according to the superintendents, is the fact that teachers who have been laid off do not want to jeopardize their unemployment compensation benefits by substituting on a per diem basis.

Being aware of the superintendents' needs, Dean James D. Turley of the college's School of Education and Human Development, Dr. Kenneth R. Walker, associate professor of secondary education, and Crenson came up with the proposed program and offered it for Pontarelli's consideration in early December.

The commissioner approved the proposal that students serve as certified substitute teachers under certain conditions.

Among those conditions, it is stipulated that the students participate in weekly seminars at the college, and that students holding emergency substitute certificates only be used by a district when a fully-certified substitute teacher is not available.

"The department looks forward to working closely with the college program," said Pontarelli.

"I think it is a highly exciting program," said Crenson, adding, "it meets the needs of the school districts. It gives our undergraduates further experience that will produce better teachers for Rhode Island, and gives the students money."

He said he anticipates the program will grow in size.

'You really deserved to come here'

"The flute is my favorite instrument because it sounds so sweet and when they played it, I could picture what I thought it was telling me."

"The singers were...(?) They are my mom and dad's kind of music. I liked it also. They were great!"

"The brass instruments were very good. I hope you come again and bring some different types of instruments."

"It was rilly great and I hope you come back agin."

Marciniak brings his RIC ensembles "in one form or another" from school to school each year. He says he does this "partly as a service to the schools and partly as recruiting."

The schools he visits are not limited to middle or grammar schools but "any kind of school" and he seeks a program that is not only entertaining but informative.

He has a standing offer to any school throughout the state to bring the vocal and/or instrumental ensembles to perform for them upon mere request. Any schools that are interested should contact the RIC Music Department. Phone 456-8244.

The letters he received from Barrington after the recent performance were all extremely courteous, brief and to the point—as only sixth graders can be. Generally, every aspect of the performance was noted and praised in one letter or another. Even Marciniak's performance was noted with appreciation:

"You must have taken a lot of time, effort and patients to do all that hard work."

"We appreciate your talent which is great, your ability which is just dandy, and the big thing I'm thanking you for is your talent. Thank you again."

"Thank you for taking the time to come here. I appreciate your talent very much. Your performance was great."

"You did a nice job yourself playing the pianio in that piece."

Of course, in virtually any group, there are sophisticates:

"The violin player is truly talented. She did an excellent job. The drums added a lot of dimension to the song."

"I thought the ninth-grade violin player was phenomenal! I especially like the last piece and the choral singing and the flutes played wonderfully. I play an instrument myself, so I realize how much practice went into this."

Almost every letter called for Dr. Marciniak and his ensemble to make a repeat visit: "Your performance was wonderful and I hope you come again."

"Again, I'll say I enjoyed the ensemble, and I hope you'll visit again."

"I enjoyed everything and I hope you come back."

"I thought it was wonderful, and I hope you come again soon."

And then, of course, there was the comment that could be taken two ways: "I especially liked the flutes and most of all the end of the program."

Sincerely,

(43 Sixth Graders)

Barrington Middle School

P.S. We loved it!!!
